LOCAL MARKETING

5 things I check on a business's Google profile before every sales call.

Most owners have never looked at #2. It's usually costing them calls.

01

The primary category.

It's the single biggest local ranking factor. If you're a roofer listed as a general "Contractor", you're invisible for the searches that pay.

02

When the last review came in.

Most customers only read reviews from the last few months. A 5.0 rating means less if the newest review is from last year.

03

Whether the owner replies.

A short, personal reply to every review tells the next customer someone is actually running the place. Templates don't count.

04

Services and description.

Are the jobs you actually want listed as services? Google can't send you calls for work it doesn't know you do.

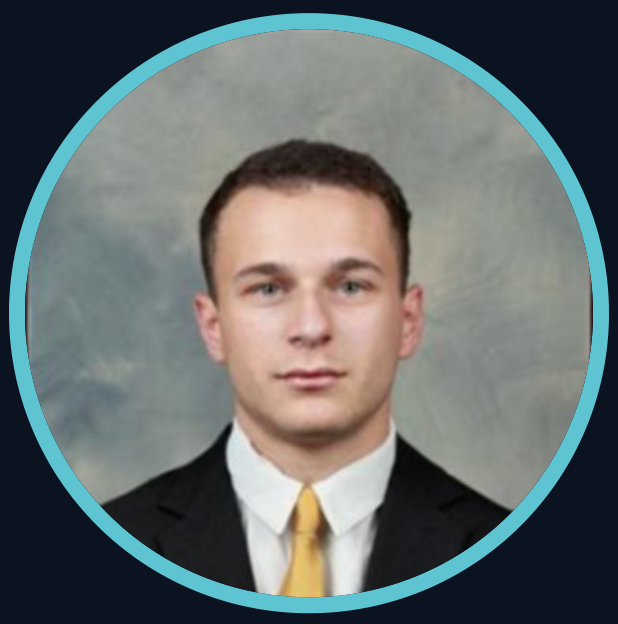

05

Does it match your website?

Same business name, phone number and location on Google, your site and every directory. Mismatches make Google less sure who you are.

None of this costs money.

It just takes someone actually checking. Most profiles fail at least one.
